LONDON, England (Thursday) -Moving a motion in the House of Commons this afternoon for the appoint ment of a select committee to investigate the charges made by General Maurice, former Director of Military Operations at the War Office, Mr. Asquith said he thought it was not the business of Parliament to constantly inquire into the conduct of successive phases of the war. The House of Commons, he added, had more than enough of such inquiries already. Mr. Asquith denied that his motion was designed to obtain a vote of cen-sure of the Government, saying it was absurd to describe it as such. should he find it his duty to censure AMSTERDAM, Holland (Thursday) the Government, he said, he hoped Budapest dispatches to German that he would have the courage to do

He considered it far better to adopt the familiar machinery of a select committee from the House. The Government's proposal for a court of honor amounted to an admission that an inquiry was necessary and that the matters raised were so secret they could not be discussed even by a select committee. He asked whether the Government still thought an inquiry was necessary or that the case could be considered without the presentation of

In a 35-Window Exposition at the Great Morse Store

Here, in by far the longest stretch of windows of any clothing store in New England. In a "picture gallery" extending on three streets to a total of more than 350 feet. Displaying 150 different suits and top coats at a corresponding range of prices, representative of more than 6,000 garments within the store. Spectacular and convincing proof of Morse leadership in vastness of stock, in originality of style, in quality of materials, in thoroughness of making, in reasonableness of prices.

VOU are invited to attend this extraordinary demonstration of Morse-Made superiority. The short trip to Adams Square is your only "ticket of admission."

And remember, when you read the exaggerated statements now current regarding the worth of clothing made in other parts of the country, that every garment in this superb collection (embracing every desirable all-wool fabric shown anywhere, and at a price-range of from $17.50 to $40 and up) has been designed and made in our own workrooms under our own direct and constant supervision, and for style, fit, quality and wear, will challenge comparison with any other leading brand of American clothing.

The Exposition Includes:

One window of Men's Suits at $17.50 Two windows of Men's Suits at $20.00 Two windows of Men's Suits at $22.50 Two windows of Men's Saits at $25.00 Two windows of Men's Suits at $27.50 Two windows of Men's Suits at $30.00 Two windows of Men's Suits at $35.00 One window of Men's Suits at $40.00

Counsel at Hearing Before Com-

BOSTON, Mass. - Consumers of called upon to pay higher rates by reason of the fact that the Edison Electric Illuminating Company is losing money through the daylight-saving plan and advancing prices. Mr. MacFarland contended that no postponement is necessary. "The questions upon which the Edison company is asked to throw light have to do with the business done by the company before the war. Mr. Munro said that at a time like the present he felt that cooperative agriculture meant more tillage and therefore more food, and accordingly the activities of the society were most closely linked up with the vital war activities of the day. They were in the twelfth year of the society's operations. The milk depots established under the direction of the society had materially helped to maintain a prop-er supply. They provided improved methods of treatment and secured proper distribution. The Central Lonamittee regarded the formation of depots as of great importance and the society had been invited to cooperate with the Board of Agricul-ture in the establishment of these depots in suitable centers throughout cotland. The Statler Hotels are well patronized, and well spoken of, and well-known everywhere because they are good hotels.

That explains, too, why there are four Statlers. The first one built (at Buffalo, 1907), gave travelers some new ideas about what constitutes hotel goodness. Those ideas, as expressed in Statler equipment, and policies, and operating practice, were so successful that other Statler Hotels were opened at Cleveland (1912), and Detroit (1914), and St. Louis (1917). Each of them was successful from the first-because the Statlers are good hotels.

So Here's New York

Now the Pennsylvania Railroad is building a hotel in New York—to be opened in the fall. It will be the largest hotel in the world, as behts a hotel erected one of America's greatest railway systems in America's first city.

And, because the Statler Hotels are good hotels, this new Hotel Pennsylvania, in New York will be Statler-operated. It is being equipped with the typical Statler comfort features and conveniences which travelers like so well; it will be operated under the Statler policies of a full and liberal money's worth, and guaranteed satisfaction, to every pairon; it will provide in New York the kind of good hotel which is so successful in these other American cities—taking advantage of all the opportunities for betterment which are possible only in this biggest American city, and in a location opposite one of America's most important railway terminals.

Use These Good Hotels

Every-every-Statler bedroom has private bath, circulating icewater and numerous other unusual con-veniences. And here is an instance of Statler service to guests: When you wake you find a morning paper under your door—but you don't find a charge for it

German propagandists have flooded Spain with this document printed in Spanish, and copies have come into the ossession of the State Department. Having established its German origin. the department tonight made public this translation:

"Besides an untold amount of war materiel captured on the battle field. the Germans have taken possession of incalculable booty in France and Belgium, including:

"High-grade watches, 417; average watches, 5016; underwear, 18,076; emroideries and women's handkerchiefs. 15,132; umbrellas and parasols, 3705; silver spoons, 1876; bottles of champagne, 523,000.

"These figures show a large increase over those of the campaign against France in 1870-71.

"In Belgium, besides many art treasures, they have confiscated old paintings valued at 3,000,000 pesetas. "Due to the treachery of Cardinal Mercler and other priests who did their utmost to stir the priests against the good-hearted German soldiers, they were forced to teach a severe lesson to the Belgian and French (Roman) Catholics.

"Cathedrals destroyed, 4; rendered unserviceable, 8; churches destroyed 27; rendered unserviceable, 34. Total.

"In Poland, also, a large number of churches have been destroyed for military reasons. The figures concerning these have not yet been published.

"As a result of the stupid stubbornness of the Belgian people in continuing the struggle after their bloody and final defeat on the battle field, the German officers were forced, against their will, to impose punishments on many rich individuals and wealthy cities. This has contributed the following amounts to the German treasury:

"Punishments, 87,000,000 pesetas. Security, 13,000,500 pesetas. Reprisals, 15,750,000 pesetas. Forced contributions, 4,320,850 pesetas. Total, 120,-071.350 pesetas

"This amount includes a fine of 15,000 pesetas imposed on the Alsatian children who insist on speaking the French language, and refuse to study the beautiful German language."

THE words "style" and "fashion" are very often used synonymously; but really they are far from being synonymous.

For example: A woman may be dressed in the very latest "fashion," and still be devoid of the least vestige of "style."

Or she may wear a hat or a gown that, so far as "fashion" is concerned, may be decidedly passé, and still be admired for her "style" wherever she goes.

Any woman who has the money may garb herself in the most "fashionable" hats, gowns, boots and gloves; but this is by no means an assurance that she will be regarded as "stylish."

TYLE is individual. It is a matter of graceful lines, harmonious colors, and-most important-correct poise.

"Let's go find it."

The area was dusty and dirty, and an accumulation of papers and rub-bish, blown there from the street above during the many months that the house had stood unoccupied, filled its corners. From one of these piles Margaret drew forth a tiny Maltese kitten. Its thin gray fur was dusty and there was a frightened look in its pale blue eyes. Altogether, it was a most woebegone object. MUSIC

Cincinnati Chorus and Bach Special to The Christian Science Moni from its Western Bureau

Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion—Second oncert of the Cincinnati Music Festival, Eugene Ysaye conductor, Music Hall, Cincinnati, O., evening of May 8, 1918.

CINCINNATI, O .- Even in a city as musical as Cincinnati, where the traditions of choral singing are scrupulously and lovingly observed, it is good for those who like music to get back occasionally to a day of Bach. To be sure, the "St. Matthew" Passion without cuts is considerable of a dose for one day, but we need it. We have got far away from the fundamentals of melody and counterpoint in these days of impressionism in our composition; it is good for us to return occasionally and review the solid basis of the music of our time, and for such a purpose the "St. Matthew" Passion without cuts is admirable.

This is a work which demands of conductor and chorus a deep understanding of rhythm, close attention to tempo and great precision of intonation. It requires also a reverent spirit, which, however, must not eclipse the intensity of its drama.

On the side of expression, it was given last night probably better than could have been done anywhere else in the United States. The list of soloists contained many famous names the May Festival chorus of 311 voices was augmented by a boy choir of 300; besides the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and the four-manual Music Hall organ, another two-manual organ had been built on the stage: every ancient instrument called for in the score with the exception of the oboe di caccia, was used; and conductor, soloists, chorus and orchestra were all honestly anxious to make a creditable showing.

On the side of interpretation, there feeling shown. Mr. Ysaye apparently does not consider this a dramatic composition. He loses sight of the fact that it tells the most dramatic story in history, tells it simply, powerfully and thrillingly and with an intensity that is the very essence of drama. Therefore, certain expected pauses, as after the recitative, "But once more Jesus cried aloud and departed," were lacking, as were certain stately retards, which would easily have added to the dramatic feeling.

As it was, Mr. Ysaye kept the melodic line flowing steadily, neither hurrying nor unduly retarding, and the chorus sang with fervor and conscientious attention to the conductor's beat. A second hearing of the choir strengthens the impression of the excellent disposition of its volume. The small island of men, almost entirely surrounded by women, emits a body of tone that is remarkable for volume and color. The climax of the evening's work of the chorus came in the Sanhedrin recitative, "He Saved Others," which also afforded excellent opportunity to measure its ability.

Among the soloists, Mme. Matzenauer's beautiful contralto created the strongest impression. Her warm, even tone took on a certain pervasive quality in the aria, "O Pardon Me," that brought an involuntary ripple of applause. Mr. Whitehill grasped the dramatic possibilities of Pilate's lines and Mr. Murphy sang with a fine discrimination of feeling. Mr. Werrenrath, always artistic, measured up to prano solos in the second part, taken by Miss Garrison, do not usually fall to a coloratura voice, but this singer made them most effective. This was largely due to the warmth of her voice, a quality rare in coloraturas.

In some people's opinion one of the most interesting things in the sale was to be found in this room in the shape of the pair of Chinese Ho-Ho birds presented by Messrs. Duveen, and once the property of J. Pierpont Morgan. They were enameled in "famille rose" and their coloring, at the same time both brilliant and delicate, was remarkably beautiful. CHICAGO, Ill.-Reference has been made in a preceding article to the Russian Commissaries, who correspond to Ministers or heads of govespecially interesting piece in the ernment departments, as the "government"; but they are the "administration." At the beginning of the Bolshevist régime the Commissaries acted with vigor, force and speed. On one leaves and palm leaves, the almost flat occasion Lenine was criticized by the Soviet Congress for not submitting an important decree which had been issued by the Commissaries. Lenine's response was that he did not have date 1675, its size is unusual and it is time, and also that such procedure an exceedingly interesting specimen would have been submission to prejuof the silversmith's work. Lenine and the other will be those among the audience who as having been shown in the David Commissaries would seen to be responsible to this Executive Committee. It was the Congress that ratified the treaty. Though one is not sure that tion to "Sinbad the Sailor and other the Congress, or its Committee has been elected in a regular manner, without undue influence or control there now seems to be complete accord between this central Soviet body and the "Administration."

But what sort of a government is this, or is it one at all? Here is another question on which one must have more definite information before he can come to a decision. But here again there are facts that point in a certain direction. It would seem that the Soviets are becoming more and more powerful politically, extending their influence throughout the country, and not simply in the larger cities, as was the case at the beginning of the Revolution. The principal slogan of the Bolsheviki, their simple but forceful battle-cry, was from the very start: 'All power to the Soviets." Under the Lvoff and Kerensky régimes the Soviets exercised enormous influence many thought them the real power from the very first days of the Revolution. But the Soviet organization of last October, which supported the idea of coalition with other groups, was dissolved by the Bolsheviki; for the Bolsheviki wished "all power" to the

This last idea of "all power" to the Soviets would seem to be the significance of the recently announced official title of the new régime in Russia. One has now "The Russian Socialistic Federated Soviet Republic." Does this title exclude the possibility of all groups cooperating? Does it represent a "one-class dictatorship, such as prevailed during the first months of the Bolshevist régime? Or is this forcollection of interesting and beautiful mal title the working out of a political order which will give all classes an ophad been got together for the Red portunity-in other words a democratic order? Again the reports from Russia are too meager to allow one to answer these questions in a definite manner. But one can at least analyze this title, and suggest toward what it seems to point.

The Ukrainian Rada now "Ukrainian" people, not using the other name which was current until the Revolution, that of "Little Russian." The "White-Russians" , have not gone far in "self-determination, and they are on the west, exposed for the moment to the German invaders.
These three groups could be classed as "Russian" if one is using ethnological terminology. But under the idea of self-determination, especially where it is a case of "federation," other groups could come in. So the word Russian used here in the title is not necessarily a narrow ethnological expression. In any case the title does not exclude the possibility of non-Russian groups coming into a "Russian" federated republic.

Federation is going to be one of the great problems for Russia. What the "Russia" of the future will be will de-pand largely on how "federation" is understood. One thing was apparent to all observers of the Revolution and especially to those who had been studying the course of events in Russia during the last decades. From the first it was seen that there was to be extreme decentralization in Russia, ject to the authority and regulation as the logical result of the extreme centralization of the old regime. Under the original wording of the bill, temperance advocates were apprehensive lest the laws preventing the transportation of intoxicating liquors into no tion of intoxicating liquors into nolicense cities and towns of the State would be annulled in so far as the trolleys were concerned.

The pony express amendment, moved by Senator Churchill of Amherst, makes it impossible for a trolley company to carry liquors into a dry community without a license obtained from the local authorities. Since the law was amended to eliminate the feature which required each community to grant at least one pony express license, it has become more difficult for the local officials in dry towns to issue such licenses.

He said, "according to a decision of the Internal Revenue Department, such dividend is not taxable until the stock is sold."

Mr. Swift's statement as to the appraisement has been further explained to this bureau by Henry Veeder, attorney for the packing house, as meaning that property values of the extensive Swift holdings over the country have increased with the years. They had been carried on the books at their purchase price, he said. The appraisement revalued them as of Jan. 1, 1914, and the difference was found to total upward of $25,000,000, against which $25,000,000 in stock is to be given to stockholders. Now, on this explanation of the basis of the stock dividend, it is plain enough that the $25,000,000 involved is not coming from current earnings. It does not follow that it does not represent, to a large extent, past pears on examination the more certain that what Swift & Co. are doing when they add this $25,000,000 to their capitalization is simply to capitalize old profits to that extent. selling at more than par. This $25,000,000 stock dividend represents values which were not on the books, Swift & Co. say, thanks to aplike mad, and have those stocks ready for the time when the war is over, so

George Birkbeck, appointed to the chair of natural philosophy in that college, delivered for three years gratuitous courses of lectures for the penefit of workingmen and then reoved to London, where he continued his philanthropic schemes. After a period of discouraging experiences he ok a leading part in the foundation of the Mechanics Institute, which nter became known as the Birkbeck College. Another leader in this movenent was Lord Brougham, whose brilint career began at the University of Edinburgh with the study of natural science and mathematics, and who came to London in the same year. He was soon one of the most ardent acates of what was then styled the liffusion of useful knowledge,"

During the greater part of the Nine-teenth Century, the Mechanics' Institutes afforded almost the only means hat enabled those who had suffered from an inadequate provision of ele-mentary education before the Act of 1870 to make up for the deficiencies in heir early training. Nowhere were hese institutes more successful or established than in the north of England, and especially in the great manufacturing districts of Lanca-shire and Yorkshire. The Bible goes to great lengths to show us that numbers alone do not signify very much, but that the courage that is begotten of spiritual understanding means everything. One has but to think of Gideon and his handful of men, of David and Goliath, or of appointed to go before the army to praise the beauty of holiness, to see god, but upon an unalterable Principle, eternally good. The Drink Hydra

The port of Hull has set an example to the government and people of the United Kingdom which it is to be hoped that government and that people will take. Indeed, it is to be hoped that the example will not be lost in other quarters, which could easily be named, outside the United Kingdom. Since the government will not introduce, at least, wartime prohibition, the people of Hull, by a popular vote, have determined to do this for themselves, and it is to be hoped that other cities in the United Kingdom will indicate to the government that they too are tired of waiting for an example from those who are supposed to lead them, and are determined that if the government is too invertebrate to save the food for the people, in the era of food cards, the people have determined to take the matter into their own hands.

Hull is by no means a place which it is possible casually to ignore. With a population which, at the last census, a date considerably before the war, was 287,472, it is capable of making its views heard amongst the cities of the Empire. It is, indeed, a very considerable port, as is obvious from the fact that the net tonnage of vessels arriving in it and departing from it, during the year 1915, amounted to 5,373,000 tons. It is, in short, a great industrial city, returning three members to the Parliament at Westminster. Of these members, two are Liberals, elected by comfortable majorities, whilst the third is a Unionist sitting by virtue of a small majority. In other words, Hull is about as typical a city as could be found m all England. It is a large port with a considerable trade, and its population is largely industrial, but not so completely industrial as to be entirely one-sided. It represents, that is to say, the varying shades of public opinion which are to be found throughout the whole country, and as such affords an admirable constituency for a

Now, if a typical city like the city of Hull has been compelled to set an example to the government of the United Kingdom and to the people of the United Kingdom, by means of so striking an object lesson, it is surely only fair to conclude that it is not the only prohibition swallow which fails to make a prohibition summer. Other cities there must be feeling exactly as Hull feels, and other cities, it is to be trusted, will have the courage of their opinions, and will proceed to offer hints of a similar nature to Downing Street. At a time when there is a great shortage of bread throughout the world, at a time when the United States is conserving its wheat supply in order to help the people of Europe, it is surely a scandal that so vast a quantity of food should continue to be wasted in the making of crink in the United Kingdom. It may be perfectly true that the United Kingdom is not in a different category to any other country, with the exception of Canada, where Sir Robert Borden has set a great example to humanity. It is, indeed, no doubt true that the actual consumption of alcohol has been largely reduced in the United Kingdom, but this does not in the least affect the fact that, when the minotaur of war is claiming the bodies of the world's young men, when the trenches have become the very type of selfsacrifice and devotion, it is the duty of those who stay at home, and profit by the self-sacrifice of the trenches, to make their own self-sacrifice of such small things as their carnal appetites, for the benefit of the world.

Let there be no doubt about it that this question of self-sacrifice is, in the case of those at home, a mere paltry one of appetite. The man who cannot restrain himself from alcohol, though he knows that other people elsewhere are sacrificing themselves to give him corn for bread, the man who cannot sacrifice his appetite, though he knows that the submarines are lying out in the Atlantic to sink the corn ships bringing him food, is the man who has allied himself to and is helping to sustain all the evil passions which, whether he knows it or not, are being extinguished in the present war. The war is going on until these evil passions have been sufficiently extinguished to make peace a possibility. The blood of the trenches is, in a measure, therefore, at the door of every man who does not do everything in his power to bring the war to an end. And the man who may succeed in going through the war, and retaining his right to drink to the end, will only be able to congratulate himself that the freedom for which he exerted himself was the freedom of the bottle.

Any person who will weigh the bottle against the quartern loaf will see quite easily what all this means, from the mere point of view of the food supply alone. The gentleman who likes his glass of beer, and does not see why he should not have it, buys, by the admission of Dr. Hutchison, a food value represented by 86 calories, the standard by which food is measured, just as distance is measured by the foot. Now these 86 calories cost him threepence, but threepence will buy him threequarters of a pound of milk whose food value is 300 calories; or 19 ounces of bread, whose food value is 1440 calories; or 21 ounces of flour, whose food value is 2100 calories. It is certainly not necessary to exaggerate the importance of such figures, but it is no exaggeration to point out that in the proportion in which the glass of beer is indulged in at the expense of the glass of milk or the loaf of bread, deleterious physical conditions are set up, which have been acknowledged, in the recent medical report on alcohol, published in the United Kingdom, to be due to the fact that alcohol has in the main, if not wholly, the effect of a narcotic, which, in turn, exercises an influence over the drinker which, at best, is not merely useless but actually unequivocally detrimental. This statement is supported by Dr. Bernard Fantus, in the Journal of the American Medical Association, who declares that in the hands of the public alcohol is a dangerous habit-producing narcotic, which the medical profession, being well aware of its evil effects, should ally itself against. Should humanity, he insists, be deprived of liquor, it will have lost a consoler, but it will also have lost the necessity for consolation.

The Colonial Office in London and certain shipping interests in the United Kingdom appear to be so concerned that no one should unnecessarily lose this consoler, that at the time when every truck on a railway and every foot in the hold of a ship are valuable, they are permitting gin from Holland to be imported into England for exportation to the west coast of Africa. Now, curiously enough, this first transshipment takes place at Hull, from whence the gin is carried over the English railways to Liverpool, where it is again shipped for transport to West Africa. Last December, alone, 28,000 gallons of gin were brought from Holland to Hull, and from thence passed on, over the railways, for reshipment to Gambia and other British colonies. The iniquity of this proceeding has aroused that famous pro-consul. Sir Harry Johnson, a man whose influence over the African Negro is second to none. Sir Harry asks whether there is nobody in Parliament who will take a final wrestle with this hydra, which is seeking a last refuge in the corridors of Downing Street, where the officials of the Colonial Office are excusing the trade in deference to the Dutch shipper and to the British shipowner. The vast majority of the British West African possessions are, Sir Harry insists, strongly and determinedly prohibitionist, but there is a gin sodden colony on the Gambia estuary, and an alcohol steeped district on the Gold Coast and in Ashanti where, to their grievous detriment, the natives are allowed this

Now, unfortunately, the determination of the city of Hull to insist on prohibition will not affect the carrying of gin in bond from Holland to the Gold Coast, but the Colonial Office can bar the transport of it by a word tomorrow, and it is a curious commentary on the ethics of shipping that the very moment when every foot of space is supposed to be in demand, it should actually be possible to increase the exportation of gin from Holland via England, or direct in British ships, to West Africa. There is nothing whatever "sentimental" or "goodygoody," Sir Harry insists, in his anxiety to blot out so vile a traffic. He is inspired solely by the purely practical point of view of its deleterious effects on the natives and whites alike. And for this reason he calls on Downing Street to put an end to this traffic, almost simultaneously as Hull suggests to Downing Street that it should give up its jellyfish attitude in the matter of prohibition.

Nicaragua Enters the War

NICARAGUA has declared war on Germany and upon the allies of the German Empire. This information comes later rather than earlier than was expected, although there never has been any question, in the United States, as to the attitude of that Central American Republic toward the principals in the great conflict. Five days after the Congress at Washington declared war between the United States and Germany existent, or on April 11, 1917, word was received from Managua to the effect that, notwithstanding a strong undercurrent of pro-Germanism in the country, the most prominent men of all parties were determined to support the Government in its declared policy of frank amity toward the United States. The German colony in Nicaragua, which is quite populous and prosperous, had been assured of protection, but accompanying this assurance was the warning that if any of these aliens were found to be intriguing they would receive short shrift.

Although at that date there was no apparent prospect that Nicaragua would take the extreme step of declaring war, many of the leading people of the Republic were strongly favorable to a more open avowal of sympathy with the United States and the Allies on the part of their Government, and agitation to this end resulted in the severing by Nicaragua of its diplomatic relations with Germany on May 19, 1917. Nearly a year elapsed, therefore, before war was formally declared.

Nicaragua is the third of the Central American, and the fifth of all the Southern American republics formally to assume a hostile attitude toward Germany. Panama and Cuba declared war against that nation on April 7, 1917, one day after the United States had taken similar action. Brazil made its declaration on October 26 of the same year, while Guatemala entered the struggle on the 22nd of last month. But aside from these, Bolivia severed diplomatic relations with Germany on April 14, 1917; Honduras, on May 18, 1917; Haiti, on Sept. 19, 1917; Costa Rica, on Sept. 21, 1917; Peru, on Oct. 5, 1917, and Uruguay, on Oct. 7, 1917. Argentina has been at the point of open rupture with Germany more than once within the last year, but President Irigoyen, who appears to be under the influence in part of an anti-American and a pro-German element, has thus far succeeded in preventing the country from taking what to all appearances is its natural course.

Nicaragua may be of little or no value to the United States and the Allies from a military point of view, but, eonsidered economically and morally, it is vastly better for them to have the friendship than the enmity of the Republic. The United States has very near and valuable interests within its borders, being the owner of the right-of-way of the trans-isthmian canal which must, sooner or later, be constructed to supplement the Panama water-way, and the possessor of an important naval base in the Bay of Fonseca, on the Pacific, and of Corn Island, on the Atlantic coast. The coming into the war, on the allied side, of Guatemala and Nicaragua will unquestionably influence some of the other Central and South American republics that are still holding aloof, partly or wholly, to do likewise.

The term "American solidarity" is more widely known and better understood in the southern republics than in the United States. It means to those countries a closer association than has ever yet existed among them, and it gives a wider and deeper meaning to the Monroe Doctrine than has ever been attached to it in the past. German influence has aroused, in a section of the southern continent, a feeling of antagonism to what is called United States dictation, but most of the republics are now upholding American ideas in harmony with the United States. Nicaragua's action is important, since it will undoubtedly assist in aligning and strengthening the sentiment for continental solidarity and unity of action, the growth of which spells the end of Germany's long-cherished hope of obtaining economic or political domination in the Western Hemisphere.

Equal Suffrage in the Balance

One positive statement may safely be made with regard to the prospects of the equal suffrage amendment to the United States Constitution. It is that its submission to the legislatures of the several states is inevitable. This may be delayed in the present Congress, where the measure awaits only the favorable action of the Senate, or it may be obstructed and delayed in the next Congress, and in several following Congresses, but eventually such action will be taken, and once submitted, the amendment will undoubtedly be ratified.

The situation at the present time is an extremely delicate one. Within a few days, perhaps, the question of adopting or rejecting the House resolution carrying the so-called Susan B. Anthony amendment will be put in the Senate. So close will be the vote, according to the opinion of those who have canvassed the chamber carefully, that a single accession to or defection from the ranks of the amendment supporters may determine the result. Assuming a full house, sixty-four votes would be requisite to constitute the necessary two-thirds. Senator Curtis, the Republican whip, whose knowledge of actual conditions is regarded as dependable, is quoted as saying that the suffrage party can muster sixty-three votes. In the ordinary course of things, some senators will be absent and some paired when the final vote is taken, and this is as likely to be helpful as hurtful in deciding the issue. Manifestly, it is highly desirable, from the suffrage point of view, that the vote of every possible senator now in opposition, or reluctant or indifferent, shall be safely secured.

United States senators have a right to vote or to refuse to vote for or against any measure that may come before them, according to the dictates of their conscience and judgment. Because a senator's state has expressed itself adversely or favorably toward any question, suffrage, prohibition or other, it does not necessarily follow that he should adopt a similar attitude. He is not expected to reflect the action of his state in his capacity as a senator. He is not supposed to view matters from the standpoint of the state, but of the nation. Senators are frequently, and must necessarily be, at variance with their states. Otherwise a Democratic senator would have to change his politics if, during his term in office, his state should become Republican. States, for the time being Democratic or Republican, are frequently represented in the Senate by men of opposite political opinions. It does not follow that, because Massachusetts has declared for the prohibition amendment, its senators shall be for prohibition, or that, because New York has adopted equal suffrage, its senators shall be suffragists, unless they are elected on one or other of these issues, or are governed by a party mandate to vote in a certain way.

While allowance must be made for losses to the suffrage vote in the Senate by reason of the insistence of certain members of that body upon the right to vote without regard to the attitude of their respective states toward the question, as, for instance, in the case of New York, there should be corresponding gains to suffrage resulting from the assertion and recognition of this right, for it must work both ways.

Equal suffrage is practically won. At the worst it can be only temporarily postponed. Multitudes of people in the United States, long antagonistic to the granting of the vote to women, now see the futility of further attempting to stay the tide in its favor.

Lloyds

WITH the advent of the new mercantile marine of the United States the demand has arisen for an American Lloyds to help it in its enterprises and to support its commerce in unknown or little known ports. The new American Lloyds, however, would, in its origins, be a vastly different undertaking from that which the founder, whose name is now a household word, started in a London coffeehouse near the end of the Seventeenth Century. Indeed, Mr. Lloyd, whose first establishment in Tower Street was merely a resort for seafaring men, little dreamed that he had founded a marine insurance corporation which would ultimately help in securing for his country the maritime supremacy of the world. From his humble riverside coffeehouse, Mr. Lloyd used to advertise, in the London Gazette, rewards for the recovery of runaway seamen and slaves, and it was not until 1692, when he removed his establishment to the corner of Lombard and Abchurch streets, that he made a bid for the custom of merchants of standing. His clientele was curiously described at the time as comprising "brokers, stock-jobbers, Frenchmen, Jews, as well as other merchants and gentlemen"; but the beginnings of the famous "Lloyds List," with which one is familiar today, were in the "letters" he had posted up in the coffeehouse and to which a contemporary poet referred in the lines:

Now to Lloyd's Coffee house he never fails To read the letters and attend the sales.

Mr. Lloyd had, in fact, already established quite an extensive organization of home and foreign correspondents in the principal ports, and from these men he received constant news of the movements of vessels and other matters of interest to his patrons. The letters thus received were eagerly read, and at length the current ones were incorporated in a sheet known as Lloyds News. The paper was a daring undertaking in those days. Nothing of the kind existed, except the official London Gazette, and no one was allowed the right to publish political news without the authority of the Crown. To tell the truth, there was little or no demand for any, and a description of a much wanted highwayman, or a cockfight, was always given preference, while those events which go to make history went comparatively unnoticed, so that when one day Mr. Lloyd happened to publish some harmless information concerning the House of Lords, he was duly "suppressed." But the suppression was in form rather than in fact: Lloyd merely substituted handwriting for printer's ink and Lloyds News continued to be read in the coffeehouse

The insurance of ships as a regular business of Lloyds appears to have been originally introduced as one of the numerous excuses for speculation to which the South Sea Bubble gave rise. All sorts of curious and novel schemes of insurance were floated about that period, in-

Today Lloyds, although virtually a club open only to members, is a world institution and a regularly organized corporation, which, while it has not the backing of government funds, has the support and direct assistance of the British Government. The secretary is invariably selected from the British Army or Navy. On the committee there is usually a member of Parliament, sometimes a member of the Government. The corporation has established many signal and wireless stations at home and abroad, and Lloyds agents or subagents in every port of the world. Serving as insurance agents or brokers, they work, for the most part, without salary, for an organization that has been described as an empire giving laws to the trading part of the universe.

Notes and Comments

THE letter of General Maurice to the British press, which has created something like a crisis within a crisis, that is to say a military crisis in the midst of an Irish crisis, is one of those documents which must find its justification in the result. It is perfectly obvious that the responsibility the General took was a colossal one, and it is equally obvious that he has made charges the impropriety of which only the substantiation of them can excuse. Mr. Asquith has accepted an equal responsibility in making these charges the gravamen of what is practically a vote of censure on the Government. And as a result, General Maurice and Mr. Asquith have committed themselves to a step, the result of which will be known to the world in a very few hours. Nobody who understands anything of the methods of Mr. Asquith or of General Maurice will imagine that they have accepted such a responsibility lightly. But if they prove to have given their support to an attack on the Prime Minister, at such a juncture, without adequate cause, both their reputations will suffer an eclipse it will be difficult to recover from. The ordinary levelheaded man in the street will, in the circumstances, if he is wise, adopt the famous advice of Mr. Asquith himself, and be content to "Wait and see." And as the debate is to take place today, he will not have long to wait.

SAMUEL GOMPERS, president of the American Federation of Labor, has made it known that he will countenance no unrest in the ranks of organized labor in the United States until Prussianism is vanquished. There is not the slightest doubt that, if he can have his way, the union workers of the country will hold to a steady and loyal course. But why not turn Mr. Gompers' promise into a signed pledge between the Government and labor, as was done in England, where capital and labor have agreed to drop all their differences for the period of the war? The patriotism of Mr. Gompers' followers belongs, not to Mr. Gompers, but to the country, more now than ever before.

Written from Moscow on his Brighton-stamped paper, a letter has been received in England from Prince Kropotkin, the first since he left for Russia, and dated February 19. The letter has taken several weeks to arrive at its destination. The Daily Chronicle publishes a few excerpts which show that Prince Kropotkin had been asked once more to take to his pen. But the reply is symptomatic. He says: "As to writing a book, or even a series of letters, life is so full of events that it is impossible to think about it." The sad nature of these events and the rapid way in which they follow each other "make it impossible to appreciate them in a few words and still less possible to see the coming ones."

A SHORT postscript to this brief letter states that Princess Kropotkin had intended adding a few words, "but the news is so sad that one loses all intention to write to friends and to tell them what one feels." It is particularly interesting to note that Prince Kropotkin indorses the telegrams sent by Dr. Harold Williams to The Daily Chronicle. "They give," he says, "a quite correct idea of what is going on."

From the Paris paper L'Opinion: "M. Bergson lives in a quiet corner of Paris in a little house of silent and discreet appearance. The neighbors know him well, by sight at least, but they do not know what kind of work this grave, thoughtful and rather reserved man is doing. They were then not a little surprised, a few weeks ago, to see him come out in a beautiful green uniform with embroidered collar, cocked hat and a sword dangling at his side. 'Hullo,' said a concierge, 'the little old 'un from opposite has been called up: and about time.' "M. Bergson, as all the world knows, except the neighbors, was officially received a member of the illustrious French Academy

For many years, in the past, the German band has been a familiar institution in America. The announcement that the French Government is about to send to the United States a military band of picked men indicates that, in the future, the German musician may not have any monopoly of the orchestra. Of the visiting Frenchmen, thirty are first prize men of the Paris Conservatoire, and four are first prize winners of the conservatory at Rome; the leader is the former bandmaster of the Republican Guard in Paris. It is to be hoped that French and Italian bands will follow this one. Germany has hitherto furnished much of the music in America. But music and harmony are universal possessions, and the German has no better claim to them than have others. Essentially democratic itself, music may well serve as another bond to unite the allied democracies.
